copies, the largest circulation of any daily paper in Vermont outside of Burlington.

We trust that this new silver and lead mine at Newfane is not a counterfeiter.

Word comes from Westley that they are rather expecting a real tussle in the granite industry this spring.

Mr. J. Haggood of Peru considered the legislature in safe enough condition so that he could go home last night.

Mr. Martine didn't spend a dollar to be elected senator from New Jersey. However, his elector spent a great many words.

That rending, ripping, tearing noise from Montpelier's direction to-day was the wrenching away of the legislature from a $4 a day job.

"Sacrilegious" was the worst stumbling-block in an old-fashioned spelling-down match at Montpelier last night, and it is strange that Montpelier should show so little familiarity with it.

We are waiting a characteristic statement by Speaker Cannon on the Vermont county, Illinois, vote-buying allegations. We shall expect it to be red-hot, as the shame of the county.

"C. J. F." writing to the Burlington News, says that Clarence J. Ferguson was poorly treated in Mr. Shumway's hotel at Putney and that Putney is in a bad way morally and religiously. Guess who wrote the letter.

After faithfully handling $80,000,000 for a Brooklyn bank during his service, a cashier is rewarded with a set of resolutions from the directors. Possibly the directors realized they could not make money recompense without crippling their resources.

Mayor Gaynor's presidential stock, which was suddenly inflated when he became the victim of a would-be assassin's bullet, seems to be subsiding when exposed to the merciless examination of public opinion; not that Gaynor is necessarily showing himself a weak executive for New York, but that he is not showing the many-sided nature which a president ought to have. The Democratic candidates can be counted one less.

In reading current events in New York City, one is struck by the comparatively short tenure of office in the great positions of commerce, finance and transportation. If a man hangs on to his job ten years, he is rather unusual; or perhaps it should be stated that if his capacities for the exacting service demanded remain more than ten years, he is a remarkable man. Shifting, constantly shifting, is the order of the period in the great metropolis.

SHIPPING GRANITE BY WATER.

The granite quarry owners and manufacturers at Quincy, Mass., are bestirring themselves over what they consider their poor shipping facilities, and J. L. Miller and J. S. Swingle have presented their complaints in the columns of the Quincy Ledger, declaring that Quincy has splendid opportunities for shipping granite to Boston, New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and other places by water route, only that the city lacks a municipal dock for such transportation. Mr. Swingle writes a few sentences as follows:—

"Many of our competitive granite producing centers north of us, in Vermont and New Hampshire, for instance, have no outlet such as we have and are obliged to depend upon the railroads entirely, while we with all our natural advantages sit idly by and allow old conditions to continue. If the people of Barre, Vt., had such a possible outlet at their doors, how long do you think they would neglect it? There would have been enough public enterprise there to have taken advantage of every feature. Were we to wake up and utilize these water outlets, we could make the freight question one of cents, rather than dollars."

If Quincy were to utilize its water

We do not make a point of carrying "advertised brands" of clothing because we have learned (and perhaps you have) that just as good suits at a less price can be had from certain clothing manufacturers who do not spend a fortune in advertising.

You as a practical man can see this point.

Now come in and see the Overcoats and Suits that we've cut the price on.

Overcoats $4.50 up to $19.50.

Suits $3.95 up to $19.50.

transportation opportunities as much as the Maine granite centers do, it would probably find the system greatly to its advantage. Barre, for this one reason, has wished a great many times that its two mountains of granite were located within easy approach to a water front. Quincy apparently has not been taking full advantage of its chances.

A DESERTED VERMONT VILLAGE.

Goldsmith's "The Deserted Village" is as nothing compared with the village on the eastern border of Vermont, where copper was once mined and where there was formerly a bustle of industrial energy that was good to look upon. Copperfield, in the heyday of its copper glory, was a thriving community, with church, stores, village hall, and a considerable cluster of cottages; and the town of Vershire, which contained it, was proud of the industry of its part. But copper mining declined, dwindled to almost nothing and then flickered out entirely, leaving the village nothing but a group of staring buildings. In time, these became defaced by the vandals' hand, windows knocked out and casings splintered and also warped by the wearing of the elements. The village became a spectre, so hideous that people tarried not but hurried through, disturbed by the gloom which pervaded the surroundings.

And now come the finishing touches to add to the picture of a real deserted village in the heart of a thriving section of Vermont—the removal of the buildings. The Copperfield correspondent of the Randolph Herald thus chronicles the work of wiping out the deserted village:—

"H. M. Dodge is taking away his third house."

"H. B. Palmer is hauling his house to Thetford Hills."

"The paymaster's safe was shipped away on the 16th inst."

"Frank Flanders has moved the last of the long red sheds."

"John Harding has removed one of his buildings to West Fairlee."

"Mrs. Moir and family have moved into one end of the Ashbury house."

"H. B. Richardson has taken down his two houses and hauled the same to Thetford Center."

"The entire furnace building has been sold to J. Russ and R. A. Southworth, who will soon put a crew to work dismantling it."

But, lest people outside the state gain the impression that this is typical of the state, let us hasten to remark that the case is extraordinary and not indicative of general decline; rather that it is like a boom town in a western mining region which has seen its rush of business and then shrunk to nothing with the working out of the mineral resources. However, in this Vermont case, there is still copper in the mines, ready to be taken out later when capital cares to invest.

Representative Plumley Comments On the Result of Discussion as to the Most Fitting Material—Other Notes of Vermont Interest.

Washington, D. C., Jan. 28.—Thomas Canfield, a graduate of the university of Vermont, who now owns one of the finest cattle ranches in Minnesota, was in the city last week on business. Mr. Canfield, upon graduating from college, went out West to work on the ranch then owned by his father and has been residing at Lake Park in that state ever since. This year he was superintendent of the cattle exhibit at the mammoth Minnesota state fair.

The "joy ride" which several young "Tech" students in this city took in Representative Foster's automobile one evening a short time ago, resulting in the smashing of the machine, has also resulted in a general stir-up of affairs affecting the schools. One saloon keeper has been arrested on the charge of selling liquor to minors and an effort is being made for the better enforcement of the district laws on this subject generally. Mr. Foster, according to accounts, was inclined toward leniency to the young men responsible for the damage to his machine if their parents would make good the damage but the episode has resulted in the expulsion of one boy and the suspension of several others.

Willard S. Isham, the well-known inventor, formerly of Burlington, is still at his twelve year fight for the recognition of the outside explosive shell which he perfected, or rather for the establishment of his claim that his shell is the only real effective one for naval purposes at the present time. Through tests conducted by the navy department he was successful in demonstrating the value of his shell by the destruction of the Puritan, but he is now fighting to show, if possible, the inadequacy of armor-piercing shells and is now working for further tests by the department of the armor-piercing shells. According to Mr. Isham's idea, the millions being spent for armor-piercing shells and heavy armor are useless. His contention is that the fighting range, which now is much greater than it used to be an account of danger from torpedoes, has of necessity to be of so great distance that armor-piercing shells are not effective. At one time Mr. Isham had patents on his shell in fifteen different countries but the cost was so great he did not feel like renewing all of them when their time expired. He is, however, fully protected in this country and in a few other countries. According to Mr. Isham's idea the use of his shell will revolutionize naval warfare.

Representative Plumley, in speaking of the extra appropriation he succeeded in getting to make possible the construction of the Barre post office of granite, said that he was uncertain whether to convey the impression that he won a hard fight in getting the extra appropriation, thereby taking the glory for himself, or to have it go out that all he had to say was that Barre was the greatest granite center in the world and naturally should have the federal building constructed of the material for which the section is famous. He has consented to the publication of the facts in the case and given Barre the glory for having such an undisputed reputation as a granite center to acquire the extra appropriation without a struggle.

Senator Dillingham this week introduced a bill to bring within the operation of the immigration laws foreign seamen entering the United States. It is reported by the department of commerce and labor that last year 9,000 seamen deserted their ships after arrival in the United States thus escaping the inspection of the immigration officials. The bill contemplates patching up the loop hole in the law so that aliens cannot come here for purposes of entering the United States under the guise of seamen without the regular examination of all immigrants.

There is no foundation to the rumor that Capt. T. A. Chase of Bradford is to retire from the postmastership in that town. His term of office of his present appointment is good until 1914 and reports have it he is about the liveliest man of his age on the map. Representative Plumley has not a postoffice contest on his list at the present time. His most recent appointments being Hon. Kittredge Haskins in Brattleboro and John E. Sullivan, the well-known granite man, at Hardwick. The former succeeds Col. Taylor, deceased, and the latter Frank Taylor, who declined to be a candidate for reappointment.
